STANDARD TRANSLITERATION OF YIDDISH

by

Barnett Zumoff
Introduction

Transliteration is a system of representing the sounds of Yiddish by letters of the Roman alphabet. It has become the lingua franca that connects Yiddish-lovers at various levels of skill in Yiddish: those who are expert in reading, writing, and speaking Yiddish use transliteration (for example, on the blog Mendele and in our own Der Bay) to speed up and simplify communication among themselves without having to write cursive Yiddish or type Yiddish with letters of the Hebrew alphabet, which is still a slow, complicated process even with modern computers; those whose ability to read Yiddish in its original alphabet is poor but who understand the language reasonably well become, through the use of transliteration, able to read Yiddish as freely as their more learned colleagues can. They are also able to transmit Yiddish messages of their own quickly and easily. The only basic requirement for using transliteration is knowledge of what the Yiddish words sound like (some words are derived from Hebrew and the sound cannot be readily figured out from the spelling.)

Learning the rules of transliteration is simple and quick--anyone can become an expert in half an hour. However, to facilitate mutual understanding we must use a standard transliteration rather than an everyone-for-himself (or herself) transliteration, by analogy to the written standard Yiddish (klal-yidish) that is now used in magazines, newspapers, and books by all educated Yiddish-speakers regardless of their individual spoken dialects. This presentation will teach the listeners the standard rules so that they too can become experts in this useful technique.
A. Letters of the Transliteration Alphabet

1. Simple Vowels

<tr>
<td>a</td>
<td>Always like “o” in “not”;</td>
<td>tate (father).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>e</td>
<td>Always like “e” in “extra”;</td>
<td>elf (eleven).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(Note: never silent. When it is written at the end of a word (such as “tate”), the “e” is always sounded—it is not necessary and not correct to follow it with an “h” to show that it is sounded.</td>
<td>hagode, not “hagodeh.”</td>
</tr>

before “f” “tif” (deep) “shif” (ship)

before “g” “tsigf” (brick) “lign” (lie)

before “k” “mikh” (me) “shikn” (to send)

before “l” “tsil” (goal) “mild” (gentle)

before “m” “bime” (platform) “tsimer” (room)

before “n” “diner” (servant)
   “diner” (thinner)
   (two words spelled the same but pronounced differently)

before “p” “kipa” (yarmulke) “lipn” (lips)

before “r” “firi” (to lead) “lirish” (lyrical)

before “s” “mister” (ugliest) “flister” (whisper)

before “t” “geglit” (glowed) “tsiter” (tremble)

before “v” “bekivn” (deliberately) “farglivert” (frozen)

before “z” “piza” (Pisa) “icz” (is)

Always like “u” in “nut”;
   Example: “hobn” (to have)
Two possible sounds:

hard, like “oo” in “boot”
Example: “tsufridn” (satisfied);

soft, like “oo” in “foot”
Example: “puter” (butter)

2. Compound vowels:

ay Like “ay” in “aye, aye”;
Example: “fayer” (fire)

ey Like “ey” in “hey!”;
Example: “eyder” (before)

oy Like “oy” in “Oy, vey!”
Example: “froy” (woman)

3. Simple Consonants:

b, d, f, h, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, z
As in English

c Not used in transliteration; it’s “soft” sound is represented by “s” and its hard sound by “k” g Always hard, as in “gone”; the sound of “soft g”, usually in foreign words, is represented either by “dzh” or “zh” (see pages 6 and 7)

4. Compound Consonants

ch  Not used in transliteration, except to transliterate a proper name or a rare foreign word spelled with it;
Examples: “Bach” (pronounced “bakh”) and “dacha” (country cottage), (pronounced “datsha”) dzh Represents the sound of “j” or soft “g” in foreign words or names;

Example: “dzhimi” (Jimmy)
“dzherald” (Gerald)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Represents the guttural sound that is represented in German by “ch”; do not use “ch” for that sound in transliteration;</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>kh</td>
<td>Example: “ikh” (I), not “ich”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sh</td>
<td>Like “sh” in “push”; represents the sound of “shin” in Yiddish;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Example: “tsvishn” (between)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ts</td>
<td>Like “ts” in “cats”; represents the letter “tsadik” in Yiddish;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Example: “tsuker” (sugar)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tsh</td>
<td>Like “ch” in “cherry”;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Example: “tsholnt” (Sabbath stew)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>zh</td>
<td>Like the “g’s” in the French name “Georges” or the “si” in the word “Asia”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Examples: “zhabe” (frog); “zhest” (gesture)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

B. Special Issues:

1. Certain words contain the transliteration letter “d” before the transliteration letter “z”, where the “d” is more or less silent but is required nevertheless.
   Examples: “undz” (us), “feldz” (cliff).

2. Certain words contain the transliteration letter “t” before the transliteration letters “st”, where the first “t” is more or less silent but is required nevertheless.
   Examples: “fintster” (dark); “fentster” (window).

3. Verbs whose root ends in “d” retain the “d” before the conjugational ending “t”; the “d” is silent in that case.
   Examples: “er redt” (he speaks)—pronounced “er ret”—or “er shmidt” (he forges)—pronounced “er shmit”
4. Verbs whose root ends in “z” retain the “z” before the conjugational ending “st”; the “s” is silent in that case.
   \[ \text{Example: } “du muzst” \text{ (you must)—pronounced as “du muzt”} \]

5. Capital letters are generally not used in transliteration. They are sometimes used (but are not required) in three situations:
   \[ \text{(a) At the beginning of a sentence;} \]
   \[ \text{Example: } “Ikh vil aheymgeyn” (I want to go home.) \]
   \[ \text{(b) In a proper name;} \]
   \[ \text{Example: } “zayn nomen iz Yankl Shapiro” \]
   \[ \text{(c) In some proper nouns that have attained general usage;} \]
   \[ \text{Example: } “Peysakh” \]

6. Letters are not doubled in transliteration.
   \[ \text{Examples: } “kabala”, \text{ not } “kabbala” \]
   \[ “yom kiper”, \text{ not } “yom kipper” \]

7. Certain proper nouns have achieved wide usage with transliteration spellings that are not correct by the rules of standard transliteration, but are more or less acceptable.
   \[ \text{Examples: } “Chanukah” \text{ or } “Hanukkah” \text{ (preferably “khanike”),} \]
   \[ “Succoth” \text{ or } “Succos” \text{ (preferably “sukes”), “Sholem Aleichem” \text{ (preferably “Sholem Aleykhem”)}} \]

8. Words of Hebrew origin are normally transliterated with an Ashkenazic pronunciation.
   \[ \text{Example: } “mishpokhe” \text{ (family), not } “mishpakha”.} \]
   You may deliberately transliterate with a Sephardic pronunciation if you wish, especially in established expressions.
   \[ \text{Example: } “kol hakavod” \text{ (all honor), instead of “kol hakoved.”} \]

9. You may deliberately transliterate to represent a Yiddish dialectal pronunciation.
   \[ \text{Example: } “Vi gayt ir?” \text{ (Where are you going?)} \]

10. An apostrophe may be used for a contraction, but not for a possessive.
   \[ \text{Examples: } “s’iz” \text{ for } “es iz” \text{ or } “kh’hob” \text{ for “ikh hob”, but not “der mame’s shikh” \text{ for “der mames shikh”}}.} \]

11. In representing a non-vocalized vowel (a “shvo”), there are two possibilities: use an “e” or an “i”.
   \[ \text{Examples: } “kedey” \text{ or } “kidey” \text{ (in order to).} \]
12. In words of Hebrew origin with a prefix of “b” or “l” followed by a non-vocalized vowel, one may follow the prefix with either an “e” or an apostrophe.
   Examples: “lekhayim” or “l’khayim” (the toast: To life!); “beemes” or “b’emes” (truly).

13. In words with a consonant before a final “n,” do not insert an “e” between the two consonants (Examples: “traybn”, not “trayben”; “trefn”, not “trefen”) except when there is an “m”, “n”, “ng” or “nk” before the final “n”, in which case do insert the “e” before the final “n”. (Examples: “nemen”, “shaynen”, “zingen” and “trinen”).
